MSc Person-Centred Health and Social Care

Second Intake
September 2020

Developed by the European Institute for Person Centred Health and Social Care at the University of West London, in association with the European Society for Person Centred Healthcare.

The last decade has brought with it an increasing recognition that chronically ill patients need more comprehensive forms of assistance, mandating a need to move away from current approaches to the management of these conditions and towards newer models of care that are personalised, integrated and contextualised.

This course is for graduates and practitioners who wish to develop their careers in health and social care. This course was designed to respond to the new challenges created by the need to integrate health and social aspects of care, across a wide range of professional areas and disciplines.

Duration
Two years (part-time)

Location
West London Campus

Modules
In the first year the students study the following core modules:

- Theory and Practice of Person-Centred Health and Social Care
- Health and Wellbeing
- Research Methods
- Implementation and Change: Leadership and Shared Decision-Making

- Plus one option from:
- Person-Centred Mental Health Care
  - Primary Care: Approaches to Person Centredness
  - Secondary Health and Social Care: Approaches to Person-Centredness

In the second year students complete a 12,000 word dissertation for the award of the degree.
